Johnson advised Ms. Johnson advised the members of the Board that her first hearing about her grandson being charged for the crimes that are indi-cated was when Offi-cer Deal came to ther rectasion for another procession of thing else and Ms. Fagans pulled the re-cord up.

Commissioner Mur-phy asked Ms. John-son if she was saying that Mr. Pierce nev-er informed her that her grandson was charged with felony carnal knowledge of a juvenile.

Ms. Johnson advised Commissioner Mur-phy that Mr. Pierce did not and he has been to her home on more than two occa-sions and all he asked her was if her grandson was there and she would advise him if he was or not.

Commissioner King asked Ms. Johnson, "How long have you been at that ad-dress?"

Ms. Johnson advised Commissioner Mur-phy that she was made aware that she could not do so, but she did not know her grandson had this charge against him.

Commissioner Nunley asked Mr. Pierce if this infor-mation was public knowledge.

Seven boys and one girl, ages 13 and 14, huddle in a room to learn about money: the stock market, dividends, debit, credit and credit-card

He couldn't resist taking a seat in a corner to scout Banyasz's lessons.

The class is one of several that are part of a three-hour after-school program called Greenbriar Cafe.

Greenbriar Café is financed with a federal grant. About 180 of the school's 750 students signed up for activi-ties ranging from being tutored to learning about yoga, bridge and chess. Of the 180, about 70 show any given afternoon, Stacey Gepperth, director, said.

Banyasz and Gillingham be-gan to teach financial literacy in September. "It fills a void because nobody really takes the time to teach these kids about credit or investing money or finan-cial literacy," Gillingham

Gillingham previously taught such a class at a school in Brunswick.

"These kids are a lot smarter than what we give them credit for," he said. "But the catch is you have to get their intention and make it

Why? he asked.

Students were thinking for an answer that Banyasz soon provided: "People don't have that money right now. If people are going to buy gas or buy a hamburger, they are going to buy gas."

His lesson introduced the students to a new phrase; discretionary income.

More lessons came.

One was how Google makes money from advertising. That caused Rauneet Kaur, an eighth-grade girl, to complain Google had ads for Frostys at Wendy's that were too small. Kurt McKee, an eighth-grade history teacher who helps Banyasz teach the class, ex-plains coupons help Wendy's bring customers to spend more money.

Another lesson was about dividends. Banyasz dubbed dividends as a "bonus to you to say thank you."

A third was about credit: a loan for which a borrower pays back later. Banyasz cautioned the students: "If you spend it, pay it back. If you can't pay it back, you probably shouldn't have spent it."

McKee reinforced the warning, saying young people get trapped in credit-card debt.

— foreclosures and mortgages and debated the merits of spending $50,000 to fix a house bought for $100,000 if no one will rebuy the house for $150,000 or more.

Besides new vocabulary, students got math lessons: A stock that rises to $20 from $10 a share increases by 100 percent, but a stock that rises to $120 from $100 increases by 20 percent.

Banyasz recognizes the temptations of the stock market. He makes a distinction between the market and being thrifty and productive. Stocks are "not called making money," he said. "It's called investing." He stresses the value of saving money — a lesson Gillingham learned at age 10 when noticing how his mother saved coins and bills in a box. He learned to "horde whatever money I could come by," he said.

Gillingham said he volunteered to teach financial liter-acy because children learn it only if someone teaches it.

"People can be part of a problem or they can be part of a solution," he said. "I'd rather be part of a solution.
